

Kay Barnes Watercolor Class Registration

Spring or Fall Quarter 2008

Study watercolor with Kay Barnes, local award-winning artist and international workshop instructor. Prepare for a new season of classes in watercolor. Kay is currently taking reservations for three-hour classes designed for maximum learning and growth. Total cost: $300 for ten weekly sessions.

Kay will demonstrate painting, emphasizing the use of light and color to create harmony and balance in your paintings. The use of light and color helps lead the eye and aids in the development of depth and dimension.

There will be a lot of time spent working with color relationships using color temperatures, values, and contrasts to create the illusion of a third dimension. Color mixing is the other area of painting we will be exploring in exercises, with a variety of primary triads and beyond the basics, using the color wheel as a springboard for subject matter and inspiration. Kay often states that we are really illusionists, using tricks to fool the viewer into believing what they see has a third dimension. Come learn the magic!

We will do numerous exercises in seeing patterns of values, dividing space in the picture plane and developing a greater "vocabulary" of color mixtures. In this series we will practice using color temperatures to create the illusion of distance, and focus on the use of complements to add energy, interest and mood to our work. Lectures, demos and exercises will be followed by adequate time for students to create. There will be lots of individual attention and inspiring direction in a nurturing and congenial atmosphere. It is recommended that students bring photos and/or recent work for critique if you like. Good for all levels
